Readers Theater, a free public activity sponsored by Haylofters and the Burlington Public library. All are welcome to participate or watch.

Readers Theater is a style of theater where actors present a dramatic reading of play scripts without costumes, props, scenery or special lighting. New scripts are provided at each meeting. Participants attending may watch or respond by volunteering to read a part when asked if they would like to read a particular character in a script.

Three to five scripts, of ten to fifteen minutes each, will be provided at each meeting. Attendees will be asked if they would like to read a character as each play is introduced.

Reading would take place in chairs placed in front of room or area facing other attendees. Although readers can experiment with different vocal accents or inflections, no particular acting ability is necessary to be a reader.

Plan on Attending one of these. You will be surprised how much fun this is!

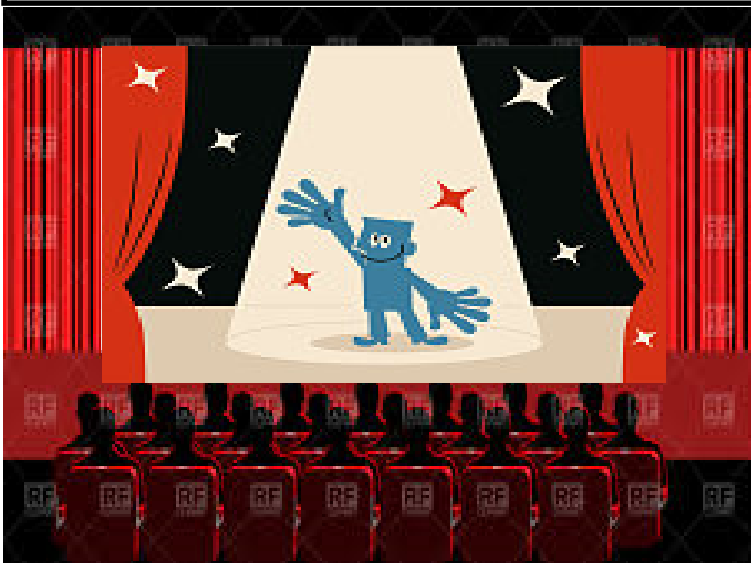

Ever wonder what goes into a performance? Volunteer some time, and we will help you experience live Theater from sets, to props to technical and everything in between!
